Diverse and inclusive student communities are a hallmark of the U.S. higher education system as they make our college and university campuses ideal environments to learn and grow. This month we celebrate the tremendous diversity and inspiration the cultures of Asia and the Pacific Islands bring to our classrooms and share with our world. Learn more here.

Another way to learn about Asian American and Pacific Islander heritage is through the Smithsonian network of national museums, located in Washington D.C. The National Museum of American History online exhibition, A More Perfect Union: Japanese Americans and the U.S. Constitution traces the history of Japanese American confinement from immigration in the late 19th century to forced detention during World War II and the court cases and redress that came more than 40 years after the detention camps closed in 1946. Make an online visit to this exhibition to learn more about this indelible mark on U.S. history.
