

PROJECT OF HUNGARIAN FULBRIGHT ALUMNI ACCEPTED AS FINALIST

A project submitted by a group of Hungarian Fulbright Alumni, led by Prof. Tamás Csörgő has been accepted as finalist in the Alumni Engagement Innovation Fund competition.

The "Circles of Self-Education in Science: Innovative Methods to Mentor Talents" program aims to set up a new form of science club.

Based on the traditions of science education, on innovative applications of modern, internet based communication tools, a proven model will be extended from the local to a national level.

Emphasis is placed on finding talent in remote, marginalized communities. Camps will be organized in small villages fighting for the survival of their schools in the face of low funding, and Science Clubs in towns where mentoring from active scientists has not yet been organized.

FULBRIGHT ANNOUNCEMENT SEMINAR SERIES CONTINUED

Information seminars about the Fulbright grant possibilities and application procedure continued at three major university sites: in Debrecen, Pécs and Veszprém.

APRIL MEETING OF U.S. FULBRIGHTERS

U.S. grantees visited North-Eastern Hungary during the Fulbright weekend on April 1-2.

Grantees met students of the Ady Endre High School and visited the University of Debrecen.

Prof. Zoltán Abádi-Nagy, former Fulbrighter and former member of the Fulbright Board in Hungary talked about the University of Debrecen and guided the group at the campus of the university. Grantees could meet members of the local Fulbright Alumni chapter, too.
