HBCUs in the U.S.

February marks Black History Month in the United States. In a segregated, post-civil war country, historically black colleges and universities (HBCUs) provided black Americans with a quality education. Many well-known and respected artists, politicians, CEOs and political leaders are graduates of HBCUs. Today these colleges are still some of the country's top producers of black doctors, scientists and engineers and offer opportunities to a more diverse student body.

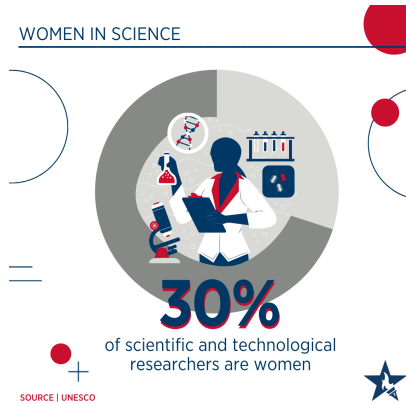

International students, take note! You don't have to be black to attend a historically black college. Many HBCUs value international perspectives in the classroom. Read

Women in Science

While more girls are attending school than ever before, girls are significantly under-represented in STEM subjects. Less than 30 percent of researchers worldwide are women. Read about the "Women in Science / Girls STEAM Camp" that is trying to change this narrative: <http://bit.ly/2vMVDIA>
